GENERAL FACULTIES COUNCIL

The regular meeting of General Faculties Council was held February 24, 1975.

CODE OF STUDENT BEHAVIOR

Council debated and approved a Code of Student Behavior which had been prepared by the Campus Law Review Committee, established by General Faculties Council in 1963. The Code now goes to the Board of Governors for approval, after which it will be printed in full in Folio, with special distribution for students.

SIZE OF THE UNIVERSITY: REPORT

Members approved a motion by D.M. Ross, Dean of the Faculty of Science, to refer the Report of the Ad Hoc Committee to Study the Size of the University to the University Planning Committee for study. The University Planning Committee will then make specific recommendations to General Faculties Council.

By approving Dean Ross's motion, Council defeated a motion by Donald Quon, Associate Dean of the Faculty of Engineering and chairman of the ad hoc committee, to recommend to the Board of Governors that a Board task force be established to study, report and make recommendations pertaining to University priorities. Dr. Quon's motion embodied the major thrust of his committee's report: that serious attention should be given to the University's priorities and goals as they relate to the various perceived and actual functions of the University.

The ad hoc committee originally was struck to study the size of the University. In his report, however, Dr. Quon stated that "the concerns about University size cannot be adequately studied without considering priorities in objectives and functions and without an examination of alternative structures, instructional modes and space utilization." Supporting his recommendation that a Board task force be established, Dr. Quon said that "this set of concerns is of such high priority that it needs to be studied at the highest levels by a more effective mechanism than the present ad hoc committee."

In making his recommendation, Dean Ross agreed on the importance of the report but felt that a task force was not necessarily the

"In Touch with U," the television program about the University seen Sundays at 5 p.m. on ITV (Channel 13), has been scheduled to continue at least through June 1975. Announcement of the renewed contract was made after an analysis in January of ratings taken in late fall. In its time slot, "In Touch" drew approximately 15 percent of the total adult viewing audience, a rating considered to be good given the competition at that time. most effective means of dealing with the matter of priorities. He argued that, initially at least, the report should be studied by a group directly related to General Faculties Council, such as the University Planning Committee. He was worried that a task force might simply survey the whole matter again without reaching substantially different conclusions.

In the background portion of his 63-page report, Dr. Quon explained some of the difficulties encountered by the ad hoc committee.

"Lacking guidance on the specifics of what General Faculties Council wanted [in its original directives to the committee], the Committee consulted the Executive Committee of General Faculties Council and suggested the following terms of reference:

1. To seek data on the projected demand for University programs within the province and this University in particular . . . The committee cannot attempt such predictions itself but will depend primarily upon Institutional Research and Planning.
2. To seek information on the effects of fulfillment of academic and physical objectives of the university should a distinct change in projected size occur.
3. To seek briefs from interested persons and groups within the University community with the primary objective of obtaining opinions on the effects of size upon various aspects of University life and welfare . . .

"The Committee decided to pursue point (3) with the hope that more specific issues could be articulated as the study progressed. To that end discussions were carried out with a number of University administration officials, with representatives of student bodies, etc.

A study of what students, academic staff, and non-academic staff thought about specific size issues was carried out by the Office of Institutional Research and Planning (OIRP) . . . In addition, OIRP prepared . . . a comprehensive bibliography of literature [dealing with] university size . . .

"The committee did not spend much effort on point (1); perhaps it realized at an early stage the futility of trying to formulate plans, even short-term ones, using current methods of forecasting enrolment . . .

"That left the committee with point (2), an obviously difficult area—so difficult in fact that the committee has had great difficulty in coming to grips with the problem, and difficulty even in defining specific issues to be analyzed. As a consequence the study has dragged on interminably, and the author of this report is the only one on the present committee who was an original member.

"In an interim position paper . . . our ad hoc committee said that:

"We have come to the conclusion that the isolated question of the total size of the University is not very meaningful. We believe that the only restrictions the University should accept are economic and the fact that the numbers capable of effectively using the opportunities (educational) are restricted by population and by nature.

"Having said this, an obvious conclusion might be that the committee should retire. Yet there is a feeling abroad that the University is too large, or in danger of becoming so, a feeling which does not quite reach the level of reasoned expression. It is to this feeling that we must address ourselves in our own way."

"Indeed, the committee found this feeling prevalent among the many groups and individuals which it interviewed . . . The attitude survey on effect of size had the following proposition: 'The University of Alberta is so large, formalized and impersonal that it is little wonder student and faculty loyalties are hard to develop.'

"Of the students surveyed, by a 3:1 ratio [they] expressed their agreement with the statement.

"Having found relatively widespread misgivings about the size of the University, the committee addressed the question:

Are these misgivings tied solely to size and hence inevitable, or are they the result of the structure which this University developed to handle size, or are they the result of our current mix of students, or are they the result of our current priorities?

The original questions, the original terms of reference have therefore been rephrased, but in our meeting with the Academic Development Committee [we were encouraged] to pursue this new direction . . .

"Why are we talking about goals and priorities when our mission was to investigate size? Because in the same period, when this University acquired multiple functions, it also grew in size dramatically, from a student body of 3,824 in 1955-56 to 18,336 in 1970-71. The two [size and priorities] are of course related. But it is our thesis, to be expanded in the rest of this report, that it is not the fact of mere size that is causing our main problems; rather it is the failure of the University to develop a logical, self-consistent, coherent set of goals to handle its multiple problems [which] is the real problem. For each function there is a different 'optimal' size; for each function, the implications of size are different . . . For the research function, large size is not a handicap; indeed, it may be an advantage. On the other hand, for excellence in liberal undergraduate education, large size may not be necessary and may in fact be a disadvantage . . . Thus, to the question: 'Is The University of Alberta too large?' the first response must be 'too large for what purpose?' The other side of the coin is that if both our size and our functions are specified by external sources and by history, then we must ask whether our existing organizational structure, our existing decisional processes, our existing policies have adequately handled the problem of size and of multiple purposes."

"No shoes on the gym floor, please!" This was a directive of the first order in the days of the sockhop, days which now are little more than distant memories. There may be just as many campus dances today as there were in the past, but there are many differences: they are not held in a gymnasium; they usually are called "socials;" and they offer refreshments of a slightly different nature. Some of the traditional get-togethers are still going strong, however, and one of them is the infamous Bar None sponsored by the Aggies. Unlike the Bromo Ball pictured here, Bar None never has required you to remove your shoes. In fact, the stronger the shoe or boot, the better—it's a matter of self defence.

NOTICES

EXTENSION COURSES

A two-day seminar on Planning Programming Budgeting Systems will be held by the Department of Extension March 12 and 13. The seminar will explain this management process which integrates program planning, financial planning, and financial control to assure the best use of resources.

The seminar has been designed for public administrators, budget officers, financial planners, and others who wish to improve management skills. Registrations are being accepted in 228 Corbett Hall; the fee is $75 including lunch both days. Further information may be obtained by calling 432-5067 or 432-5066.

MAIL DELIVERY

The following notice has been received from Roy Bennett, Director of Purchasing.

The distribution clerks who are delivering mail within each building on campus will be rotated on a regular basis. The first rotation has taken place in the past week.

There are considerable benefits in a scheduled rotation of personnel, to both the distribution clerks and staff in general. They include:

1. each distribution clerk will have an equalized workload, as he will eventually move through all the routes—some are lighter than others;
2. each distribution clerk will become better acquainted with the total campus mail system;

3. holidays and sick leave will be covered easily, because experienced personnel will be readily available;

4. the routes will remain consistent, as each new route man will adhere closely to the route plan outlined in his manual; and

5. a better assessment of each route will be possible and will aid in determining future changes.

Hopefully the principles underlying the scheduled rotations will enable distribution personnel to maintain, and improve where possible, the level of campus mail service.

The co-operation and support of all staff regarding these changes will be appreciated.

TRAVEL-STUDY COURSE ESTABLISHED

An interdisciplinary course of study on society and life in Eastern Europe has been established for Summer Session 1975 and will be held between July 2 and August 12.

The course will be conducted in English and, like other summer session courses, will include intensive reading and writing assignments and may be credited towards a degree.

The regular instruction will be supplemented by lectures (in English) by Ukrainian and Polish instructors from the Kiev Shevchenko State University and the University of Warsaw, as well as by field trips to a number of cities in the Ukraine and historical sites in the Ukraine and Poland.

The course is open only to students with Canadian passports. Further information may be obtained from T. Yedlin, Department of History, 2-23 Tory Building, 432-3925.

RESEARCH GRANTS AND CONTRACTS

Further information about the research funds described here may be obtained from Gordon Holmes, Research Grants and Contracts Officer, 432-5360.

The Forest Development Research Trust Fund—Alberta Lands and Forests

The Forest Development Research Trust Fund was established in 1974 when the Legislative Assembly enacted the Forest Development Research Trust Fund Act to provide financial contributions to the private sector and public institutions for conducting problem-oriented research. The results of this research should lead to improved forest land management practices and utilization in harmony with long term economic, aesthetic, and social needs.

Areas of research may include the following: genetic improvement of woody plants; improvement of reforestation techniques; improved nursery management techniques; impact of management practices of soil, water, and wildlife; development of improved site classification for forest management purposes; range management practices on forest land; increased growth and yield of wood fibre; forest watershed management; industrial use of forested lands; amenity forestry; production technology; improved planning and maintenance of recreation sites; improved forest land reclamation techniques; effects of pollution and rehabilitation of polluted forest sites; forest fire management; protection from insects and disease; increased utilization of wood and waste wood products; forest economics.

The deadline for submission of 1974-75 applications is March 10, 1975 in the fiscal year ending March 31, 1975, and October 15, 1975 for 1975-76 applications.

Support for Research Projects by the Medical Research Council and Health and Welfare Canada

The purpose of these projects is to delineate the types of research which will be considered in 1975-76 for support in 1976-77 by Health and Welfare Canada under its National Health Research and Development Program and by the Medical Research Council. The Medical Research Council will support research projects in the health sciences whether basic, applied, or clinical, including clinical trials for the assessment and validation of diagnostic and treatment procedures, but not including health care research. Research projects in the field of the methods of education of health professionals will be considered as will proposals for historical research having to do with the health sciences. Applicants will normally be expected to hold an academic or equivalent appointment in a health science faculty in a Canadian university or affiliated hospital. Health and Welfare Canada will support projects of national interest involving the systematic enquiry into the biology of human populations; health implications of existing and emerging personal, community and occupational environments, life styles, and health related practices; the impediments to and possible measures to stimulate adoption of improved life styles; the application of scientific knowledge to the prevention of disease; the need for, process of, and effectiveness of personal, community, and regional health services having national significance; health implications of new and impending scientific and technological developments in such fields as transportation, housing, and diagnostic and therapeutic measures and equipment, etc; health implications of current and imminent cultural, social, and economic transitions as causative factors leading to significant changes in interpersonal relationships and the general physical, social, and psychological environment.

Applications from any agency, association, corporation, institution, individual, or other body capable of conducting activities falling within the terms of reference of the National Health Research and Development Program will be given consideration for support.

Summer Temporary Employment Program Department of Advanced Education

- During the summer of 1975 the Department of Advanced Education will be participating in the Summer Temporary Employment Program (STEP). The STEP program provides funds for the hiring of students during the months of May, June, July, and August. STEP funds are allocated on the basis of project proposals. Major considerations are: (1) projects must be labor intensive. Very little money, if any, is allowed for overhead or equipment expenses; (2) students hired should be planning to continue their education in the fall; (3) jobs should be related to the students' career goals; (4) STEP positions must not replace existing positions. For further information contact the Department of Advanced Education, Student Services Branch, eight floor, Devonian Building, 11160 Jasper Avenue, Edmonton, Alberta T5K 0L1.
